REPAIR THAT LOOM.

Factory goods are now cheaper than homespun. But all the same they are not so good. They are not so durable, and they are not so beautiful.

The rich people in cities have found this out, and Berea College has established a school for teaching spinning and weaving and an agency for selling the coverlets and cloth and rugs and hangings that can be made at the fireside.

Mrs. Ernberg conducts this school and agency in the basement of Putnam Hall. She sells indigo and loom fixtures and is glad to give advice to women who are weaving, or wishing to weave, in their own homes.

Instead of sitting idle on the porch or by the fireside any enterprising lady can have her loom which will afford her many happy hours of artistic labor, and bring her many dollars for the education of her children and the improvement of her home.

Mrs. Ernberg is now able to pay for really good bed-covers from $6 to $7.

PENNIMAN AND McHONE.

Citizen Readers Enthusiastic.—Big Meetings in Behalf of the Children, the Schools and Everything Good.

Prof. Penniman and Mr. McHone have been making quite a triumphal tour among The Citizen subscribers. Everywhere Citizen readers are found at the front. And everywhere teachers and preachers have given our traveling representatives a hearty welcome.

And this trip is encouraging our correspondents so that the news is brighter and better than ever.

But the great thing has been the visits at schoolhouses and the splendid meetings night after night in schoolhouses and church houses along the way. Many remember

For Representative.

GERMAN D. HOLLIDAY.

Judge Holliday of Berea is candidate for Representative from this County, and merits the support of all patriotic voters, regardless of party.

The Judge is a man of proved ability and public spirit. He is a temperance man in practice as well as in principle. And he is acquainted with conditions in Kentucky in such a way that he will be most useful in the work of tax adjustment which should be taken up by our next legislature.

DO IT NOW

When you've got a job to do,

Do it now!

If it's one you wish was through,

Do it now!

If you're sure the job's your own

Just tackle it alone;

Don't hem and haw and groan—

Do it now!

It doesn't pay to shirk—

Do it now!

If you want to fill a place.

And be useful to the race,

Just get up and take a brace—

Do it now!

Don't linger by the way—

Do it now!

You'll lose if you delay—

Do it now!

If the other fellows wait

Or postpone until it's late,

You hit up a faster gait—

Do it now!

THIRTY THOUSAND ACRES OF EASTERN KENTUCKY COAL LAND FOR $50.

Interesting Letter From Professor Robertson.

In the Library of Congress, at Washington, is a rare and interesting pamphlet entitled "Observation on Emigration To the United States of America, Illustrated by Original Facts." The author of the pamphlet is William Savage, of Yorkshire the section of England from which the people were going, and the publishers are Sherwood Neely and Jones of Paternoster Row. The date of the pamphlet is 1819 just a few years after the second war with England. The object of the pamphlet is to discourage the emigration of the Anglo-Saxon stock which was taking place in large numbers, "thousands by thousands" heading mainly for Kentucky and "ramifying" other sections of the west. The authors "original facts" were derived from emigrants who had returned from America disappointed, those who were back on business and from the letters of friends and acquaintances.

In the pamphlet may be found described the difficulties of the journey to Kentucky from Baltimore where they landed and went inland either by the route down the Ohio River or along the Wilderness Road, in either case a journey beset with difficulties and dangers. The prospects of the emigrant are pictured in as gloomy colors as possible. The United States is represented as a "magnet" for the disaffected in politics, the swindler, the ruined tradesman, and the agriculturist with small capital and weighed down with taxes. The books recommending America as the land of freedom, "flowing with milk and honey" and with "luxuries without labor" are said to be written by interested persons who have large tracts of land to sell.

The prospective settlers were warned that the best land is already occupied and that those who go now will be obliged to take land in the rugged hill country. The lands when secured are not accurately surveyed, boundaries overlap in most perplexing fashion, each purchase has to be defended by three or four law suits, the practice of the courts is lax and rightful heirs are often deprived of the land that belongs to them.

The social conditions are pictured as graphically as possible. There is the loneliness of the log cabin, exposed to beasts or "suffocation from smoke." Fevers are frequent. There are no rivers, no roads, no markets for produce. Labor is scarce and can only be secured by having recourse to that "diabolical system, the purchase and employment of human beings!" There is no society "even to quarrel with" as there were only a few lawless hunters in that section of the country. The climate is changeable, emigrants must renounce allegiance to their sovereign and finally they must expect a civil war soon to come upon them.

One of the "original facts" to illustrate the gloomy picture held before the prospective Yorkshire emigrant was the case of a friend from the village of Selby in Yorkshire. This man had emigrated, bought thirty thousand acres of land in the mountains, where there were no rivers, no roads, for a shilling and sixpence an acre. The land was not good for cultivation. It had coal but labor was too dear to work it and thus the land was given up, part of it for the nonpayment of taxes and part for the sum of $50.

This pamphlet perhaps throws some light on one way in which our Anglo-Saxon population came to locate in the mountains and how they have failed to profit by its great resources of coal. Perhaps that thirty thousand acres of Eastern Kentucky coal land may be part of the domain of some of the great companies which with their millions of capital are now opening it up to the world and tempting railroads to enter from every direction to break up the seclusion and loneliness which has in places existed to the present time.

J. R. Robertson.
